Roman roads in Britannia were initially designed for military use, created by the Roman Army during the nearly four centuries (AD 43-410) that Britannia was a province of the Roman Empire. It is estimated that about 2,000 mi (3,200 km) of paved trunk roads (surfaced roads running between two towns or cities) were constructed and maintained throughout the province. Wikipedia According to Hugh Davies in Roman Roads in Britain (Shire Archaeology, 2008), the Romans began building a network of roads in Britain “almost as soon as they arrived” (p. 6). What we know about Roman roads are based on modern archaeological evidence and investigation, as there are few surviving documents about the Romans’ engineering feats. Roman roads in Britain (Book, 2008) [WorldCat.org] Starting with the basic concept of a 'road' in medieval times, and discussing the increasing need to travel, this book explores the evidence from documents and maps that provide clues as to where the roads of medieval Britain led, connecting the study of individual roads together to paint an image of the broader road network. Much of its collection was seeded by Project Gutenberg back in the mid-2000s, but has since taken on an identity of its own with the addition of thousands of self-published works that have been made available at no charge.
